

Everything you wanted to know about the new Z (and why you need to know it! – John Ball

The new Z133, a revision to the 2017 edition, is out and available to everyone who performs tree care operations whether they call themselves arborist, foresters, grounds managers or landscapers. This new edition has some major changes include the addition of a training and education requirement and a complete revision of the electrical hazards section with the introduction to electrical levels of 1 to 4 arborists and radiofrequency awareness. The aerial rescue has been updated. This presentation will cover these, and more important changes, and the incidents we hope following the Z will prevent.

Speaker Bio –

John Ball is a Professor of Forestry from South Dakota State University where he instructs courses in arboriculture, forestry and emergency medical services. He also serves as a campus arborist and the extension forestry specialist. John graduated from Michigan Tech University in Houghton where they drove down to Green Bay in the winter to warm up!